

A 20x20 heatmap visualization of the MNIST dataset. The image displays a grid of 400 small squares, each representing a pixel's intensity. The colors range from dark red (low intensity) to light orange (high intensity), with some white squares indicating the highest intensity. The pattern of colors is noisy and non-uniform, suggesting a visualization of pixel-level variations or a specific transformation of the digit images.

